Wild Futures Program

Help give our threatened wildlife a wild future by supporting our Wild Futures Program!

For more than 25 years Conservation Volunteers has worked with people all over the world to protect and restore the health of special places across the Australian and New Zealand landscapes.

Now, with the launch of our Wild Futures Program, a special focus has been added to our conservation work in key locations - places that are critical for the survival of some our most threatened wildlife.

This is where you can help Conservation Volunteers.

Wild Futures is our way of providing urgent, practical help to some of the wildlife that needs it most. Conservation Volunteers has worked with experts and identified places and animals to which a lasting and significant contribution can be made.

Did you know, for example, that the Atherton Tablelands rainforest is home to a kangaroo that climbs trees? True! Sadly, the Lumholtz tree-kangaroo faces a very uncertain future.

The main threats are destruction of its rainforest habitat by clearing for agriculture, and the added impacts of climate change on its remaining habitat.

Our goal is to improve habitat quality and connectivity for Lumholtz Tree-kangaroos by revegetating and improving key habitats and returning the land to rainforest. You can help us to reach that goal by supporting Wild Futures with your donation. Help Conservation Volunteers by completing the credit card form below or visiting www.conservationvolunteers.com.au/wildfutures and clicking on "Donate to Wild Futures". Donations of $2 and over are tax deductible.

I am sure that as you learn more about the Wild Futures Program on our website at www.conservationvolunteers.com.au you will be moved by the plight of the Lumholtz Tree kangaroo. Other wildlife we are also helping include the Brush-tailed Rock Wallaby, the Red-tailed Black Cockatoo, the Superb Parrot, Tasmanian Devil and Flatback turtles.

I thank you once again for your continued support for Conservation Volunteers. I know that by working together we can ensure that our precious wildlife will have a future -

a Wild Future!
